MUSLIM COOKBOOK

SMOTHERED CHICKEN

1 Fryer
2 or 3 med. onions
1 tspoon paprika
1 garlic clove
half stick butter
salt
black pepper
half green pepper
2 stem celery
Clean and cut chicken into servings. Melt butter in roaster, add chicken, sprinkle with flour and add all seasonings. Then partly cover chicken with water, cover the roaster and cook in oven 450 degrees until tender, then lower the oven to 300 degrees and cook until well done. Add more water if needed.

GOOD FOOD

Delicious and refreshing healthful drinks can be prepared for you, your family and guests from the juice of oranges, grapefruit, lemons, pineapples and other fresh fruits. A center piece of fresh pineapple with chocolate tips grace the table.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

When a window pane is cracked, give it a coat of clear shellac; this will keep it from leaking until a new pane is installed.

Threads off Wool Rug: After a busy day of sewing, rinse a mop in clean water, wring and brush lightly over your rug. This will remove threads which have collected on wool rug.

Oilcloth quilt patterns do not wear or tear like paper patterns.

Criscross the wires of your pictures before you hang them, and they will never shift or slip out of place.

Oilcloth makes good curtain shades. Tack or paste to rollers.

Kitchen Is Our Medicine Cabinet

Cigarettes In Kitchen

We have always marvelled at the so-called Negro woman's natural ability to do everything well, if she applies herself. It is one of the arts that she didn't lose during slavery. If they would come to the Muslim Girls' Training and General Civilization Class and learn to cook good clean nutritious foods, they would never have to worry about doctor bills.

Today we have a new type housewife who is practicing the vice of the caucasian woman.

Not only does she cook unclean food for her family, she has added the filthy habit of smoking while she cooks! Little does she realize that this destructive habit is a great drain on her physical health.

It surrounds her with filth, and I shudder when she tastes the food with her fetid breath. It is a sickening sight to watch the saliva and cigaret ashes dropping in the food. By the time the food reaches the table it is well seasoned with spittle and ashes, and has a strong taste of tobacco.

The Use Of Tobacco

It is a well-known physiological fact that the use of tobacco deadens the sense of taste; that water and all common drinks become insipid and tasteless when tobacco is used, so that the person using it involuntarily craves strong drink in order to taste it.

Therein lies the foundation of a large share of drunkenness of our young women.

Observation proves that while many women use tobacco, that are not drunkards almost every drunkard is a user of tobacco, having formed the habit from the use of this narcotic weed.

The little sum of twenty-seven cents a day expended on tobacco will amount to $98.55 a year. In ten years of her married life, $985.50 would be squandered on something that will only corrupt the morals of her family, and eventually cause them to seek stronger narcotics.

Once, in a peaceful village, along the Nile River in Africa, there lived a little boy named Abdul. Abdul lived with his mother and father and his little sister Fatima. Abdul was only eight years old but he was smarter than most boys of ten.

In the village, Abdul had a wonderful time. Every morning, Abdul and his father would go out together and do their chores. Abdul's father was a wonderful carpenter and made many beautiful things to sell to the people in the village. After Abdul was finished with his chores, his father would let him play with the many other children in the village. Every day they would play a different game and they had lots of fun.

One day, while Abdul was helping his father, a strange looking man, with funny clothes and white skin—came to his father and told him of this beautiful land where he could sell his goods, for much more money. Then that night, at a village meeting, they all decided to go with the strange man, on his big ship, to the new land where people have lots of money. So Abdul, his father, mother and all his little friends and their fathers and mothers, left the next morning on the strange man's boat, to the new land.

After the boat was out to sea, there on the ship's deck, suddenly appeared many other white men just like the man, who came to their village. These men had powerful looking guns and looked very, very mean.

PART II

Then, the man who had come to Abdul's village, ordered the other men to take Abdul's and all of Abdul's people's things from them. Abdul was so amazed he could only stand there with his mouth open. For why would a many whom they thought was their friend, suddenly betray them. The white men started to push them around. This made the fathers very angry so they started to fight back. Because there were many more white men, with weapons, Abdul's people did not win.

"Something Old, Something New"

Two excellent blue-flowered garden flowers are blue in color, on the left and love-in-a-mist on the right. Unusual in form and color, they're easy to grow, excellent for use in arrangements.

"Something old, something new, something borrowed and something blue" — these are what a new bride is traditionally advised to wear at her wedding in order to insure the success of her marriage. Oddly enough, the same words might be said to a new gardener, to insure the success of his garden.

For "something old" is certainly needed in every season's garden even if it's only a temporary one. No one would want a garden which lacked all the old, familiar plants.

In well established gardens, the background evergreens, trees, and shrubs may be the old things. In new gardens, it may be sufficient to grow once again your favorite sinias and marigolds of previous years or to grow the same kind of vine up the same trellis.

"Something new" may be as simple as growing a new variety of petunia, an unusual flower like linaria, or a "different" vegetable like lampala. Or, it may be a bit more complicated, like an entirely new arrangement of a flower border to accommodate a more colorful group of annuals and perennials.

The "something borrowed" should most certainly not be the next door neighbor's lawn mower since such borrowing is sure to lead to trouble. It should, instead, be the borrowing of ideas and the acceptance of advice from more experienced gardeners who live nearby.

They can tell you which tools you'll need, the location of the garden supply store where the clerks know their stock, the name of the greenhouse man who grows the latest varieties of annual plants. All of these will help you to have a successful garden.

"Something blue" is an important ingredient of a successful garden too, for blue alone, of all the flower colors, can either unify a garden planting or furnish it with strong contrast.

When several shades of blue are used close to one another, as the many tints and shades of delphiniums and such groupings are repeated at intervals in a flower border, they give the planting a wonderful feeling of unity.

Plant those same delphiniums with any bright orange flower near them and you'll have the strongest kind of contrast.

Whether used to unify or to strengthen garden color, garden blues are an important part of garden beauty.
